

Illustrated by Chiara Martyka

Share your story!

While studying for an exam with a few fellow male students (all part of my semester) the subject of my master thesis came up since it was part of the curriculum of our course. I would have been happy to explain my subject to my colleagues and made it very clear that I was working on that particular topic. But not only did they try to explain to me what my master's project was about, they also told me that I was false when correcting them for a wrong statement. This went on for a few hours. After that I started studying on my own again.